Melt-in-your-mouth kebabs, robust biryanis and sweets like nimish and muzaafar — we are talking about the cuisine of Lucknow. The food is a product of the Ganga-Jamuni tehzeeb of the city, just as its culture, music and arts.

These were the ingredients that spiced up this recent evening in the Capital, which saw the launch of The Lucknow Cookbook by author Chand Sur and her interior designer and architect daughter Sunita Kohli. Former chief minister of Delhi, Sheila Dikshit, ambassador of Turkey to India, Sakir Ozkan Torunlar, and his wife, Leyla Torunlar were some of the attendees.

"Indian and Turkish cuisines have many similarities. It is not difficult to find recipes that are similar," said the ambassador. The evening progressed with a Hindustani classical music rendition by Rekha Surya, who performed in the tradition of Lucknow Gharana. This was followed by dinner, which was a hearty mix of Lucknawi and Turkish delights.
